SUBJECT : Report to the Committee on International Relations of the House of Representatives

As discussed at lunch, I attach the report to the Congress by the Congressional Research Service of the Library of Congress on the subject of Soviet Strategy in the Third World. Working from open sources, I think the Congressional Research Service has done a competent job. If they had had access to our classified information there is much that could have been added concerning KGB secret funding and political manipulation.

Unless I have missed something, I think a case can be made for the fact that we have not in our finished product put together in one place any similar body of evidence demonstrating the size and nature of the Soviet forward strategy in the Third World. It might be worth attempting. What you think?
